

From Jerry Maschka

In recent months several people have contacted our office inquiring about representation after attempting to resolve their own personal injury directly with the insurance company. From speaking with these people, it seems that many insurance companies are making an extended effort to prevent injured people from seeking the advice of lawyers by providing assurance that ultimately the insurance company will “take care of them” or implying the client is financially better off without representation.

Do Not Fall Into This Trap!

All personal injury firms, including this one, offer a free consultation and, without fail, those who try to manage these cases on their own always do so to their financial detriment. This is because without the assistance of effective counsel, people do not know how to properly prepare their claim for presentation. There are literally hundreds of decisions to be made in the handling of a personal injury claim. These claims do not fall into categories of value and there are numerous factors to be considered in each valuation.

Do Not Make the Mistake of Trying to Handle Your Own Case Without the Assistance of Counsel!

Complex Law, Personal Care

Asleep at the wheel, the driver of a car crossed the centerline of a highway into the path of a tractor-trailer truck that was approaching from the opposite direction. Realizing the driver of the car would be killed if the car collided with his semi, the trucker took his rig to the shoulder, avoiding a head-on collision. But the trucker sustained injuries resulting in paralysis when his rig rolled over because of the evasive maneuver.

Because this MRR client was without a network of personal support, legal assistant Alicia More and lawyer Jerry Maschka, along with a close friend of the client, stepped in to help him get the care he needed in the hospital and during the year following the accident. Maschka and More made his friend his conservator to ensure that the client had stable lifetime care, had basic needs met, had adequate nursing care, and so that rehabilitation proceeded to the degree possible. Maschka and More put financial procedures in place so the conservator could support his friend in years ahead.

Paraplegia Presents Need for Maximum Settlement

Complex Negotiation

Though he tried mightily, the client could not recover significant function, and medical bills mounted. It soon became clear that settlement would have to be maximized and carefully structured to cover all future expenses. Also, because the client was 65 years of age, Maschka knew it was possible that developing Federal law would require repayment of future medical care, adding considerable complexity to planning for the client's welfare. To provide in the face of this complication, MRR structured a Medicare set-aside and, with assistance from an annuity company, developed an age rating that reflected the impact of the injuries on lifespan, thereby increasing the money available to the client from a $2.25 million settlement.

Says Maschka, "This client is a wonderful person and, while we relish a challenge, our primary concern is meeting our client's needs and the balance of justice which will help people move on with their lives. In this particular situation, the reward was measured because healing will never take place. He was never able to develop the strength necessary and required to enter a rehab center. Our only satisfaction was knowing we have done all that is possible to ensure he is supported and will receive practical care, which provides comfort to some degree. He paid a very high price for saving someone else's life."

tip The complexity of your injury and your overall situation will likely not be obvious in the days or weeks immediately following the incident. Do not wait to speak with an experienced personal injury lawyer who can help you recognize symptoms, seek help, anticipate future care, and guide you through a process which is much more complicated than it will first appear.
